

Evaluating Program Effectiveness

This course is designed to give the participant a foundational understanding of various perspectives and strategies to conduct continuing education program evaluations. Attention will be paid to Kirkpatrick's (1984) model of evaluation and its application to EMS education. Each level will be explored in detail with strategies for implementation considered. Additionally, the topic of formative and summative evaluations from the instructor's (or teaching institution's) and learner's perspective will be included with implications for program development and continuous improvement.
