

Critical Incident Stress Management (CISM): Strategic Response to Crisis

Knowledge of the sequence of crisis intervention processes and the appropriate use for individuals or groups, and at what times and under what circumstances, is crucial to all effective early intervention programs. This course will present essential information for the assessment of both crisis situations and the effects of critical incidents on individuals involved in those situations. Participants will learn to create an effective plan of action to assist those in crisis. Strategic planning and tactical decision-making, and the rationale for choosing one set of crisis intervention processes over another are emphasized. Participants will complete a series of exercises designed to sharpen their assessment and crisis planning skills. This course builds confidence that crisis interventionists will make the right choice of interventions for the populations they are assisting under special circumstances. This training meets the requirements of the International Critical Incident Stress Foundation.

Course topics include: strategic planning as it applies to crisis intervention; the elements of the National Incident Management System and relates those elements to crisis intervention; comprehensive, integrated, systematic, and multi-component crisis intervention programs; the planning process designed to assist the participants in assessing target populations and in determining the type, timing, and resources necessary to assist large numbers of people involved in a crisis; and the most important crisis intervention tactics to apply in a simulated complicated or large-scale crisis event.
