The Mayflower Crisis Response Team was established to provide a form of crisis intervention, specifically designed to help emergency and healthcare workers reduce the number of psychological casualties among their ranks.

Through the crisis support process, emergency and healthcare personnel are provided with tools to potentially mitigate overwhelming emotional and physical symptoms. The crisis support process also addresses very real issues that contribute to the loss of valuable employees, thereby salvaging not only careers, but resources, knowledge, expertise, and human caring.

Team members are volunteers who are familiar with emergency and healthcare services. They are carefully selected from the following groups:

- Mental health professionals, psychologists and social workers
- EMS Personnel
- Law enforcement officers
- Dispatchers
- Nurses
- Search and rescue personnel
- Other emergency and healthcare responders

Following application and selection, team members receive training in the area of stress and the crisis support process. Team members are committed to the recognition of critical incident stress in emergency and healthcare workers and to providing a means to support those in the helping professions.
